San Remo-Insects or Rhinoceroses?

Lloyd George's pretty Celtic wit and his chameleon-like capacity or taking on the hue of the environment in which he happens to be, has led him to say that there has been no disagreement between France and Great Britain; and that the public errs too often in making insects into rhinoceroses. It is true that candid discussion at San Remo has led to a compromise between the British and French premiers, an outcome much facilitated by Nitti's good sense and his capacity to lubricate when lesser men would sand the bearings.

It also is true that the joint statement to the German government anent the latter's proposition to increase the number of its permissible troops has drawn from the supreme council a stiff answer, the substance of which is that when Germany lives up to pledges already given and broken, she may then reasonably ask for favors, and not before.

On the other hand it is absurd for the British premier to try to make it appear that two weeks ago Great Britain saw eye to eye with France on other issues, or that the dispute between them was not a grave one alarming to all persons who wish the nations that fought against Germany to co-operate politically and diplomatically for some time to come, if not permanently. If the British have combined with the French to assert a firm military attitude toward Germany, the French have conceded much tending to make certain, within a comparatively brief time, decided modifications in the rigorous indemnity policy imposed on Germany by the Paris

Another outcome of the conference has been an invitation to the Soviet government of Russia to send a committee for conference on resumption of commercial relations between the allies and the nation upon which war never has been declared, and from which they derived much help while the fight with Germany was Action of this kind implies approaching political as well as commercial recognition. Will the British premier seriously contend that a fortnight ago he and Millerand both favored this first step toward extending the area of peace?

The Federation's Petition

Whether the Public Utilities Commission grants the appeal for a rehearing on the increased car fares, sought by the Federation of Citizens' Associations, the fact stands out that the civic organization in listing points where the regulating body erred reaches the

In bringing its indictment the federation says: "The commission erred in that, having heretofore by order established a standard of service on the lines of the several railway companies, and as failure was confessed by said companies in maintaining and living up to said standard of service as of the present time, or at any time since the same was ordered, said companies being thus in default, no increase in rates could or should have been granted,"

Leaving aside the conclusion, the facts admit of no argument. The traction companies have not followed or observed the orders set down by the Public Utilities Commission for the improvement of the service. The increased fares to the public have been mandatory, but such recommendations for better service as the companies have found it convenient to follow, have been instituted—the others have The Fourth Book of Moses, Called been plainly ignored.

Therein lies the seat of the general condemnation which has developed over the latest financial concession. The Public Utilities Commission is vested with disciplinary power over the companies, sin offering: but it has not seen fit to exercise it and levy the fines which might compel compliance with its orders. Neither has it made improved service a mandatory accompaniment to higher fares.

Legal opinion is better qualified to say whether such a policy should void the recent increase and entitle the petitioner to a rehearing, but there is no disputing that this condition, more than anything else, has operated to destroy public confidence in the ability of the present Public Utilities Commission to handle the traction situation in a manner satisfactory to those who patronize the lines.

The Spencer Centenary

One hundred years ago yesterday Herbert Spencer was born. A generation ago his name was as familiar in circles of philosophers, of scientists who specialized in biology, of sociologists, and of theologians as that of any man in the English speaking world. Today he is a relatively spent personal force, admired for his ambitious effort to synthesize the knowledge of his day and for his phenomenal industry and assiduity as an author and controversialist. But the materialistic conception of science, which he championed, has been brought into disrepute; his individualistic philosophy of the ideal sin offering twelve. society is submerged now by a universal demand for a socialized five of the peace offerings were strong and his own autobiography being his most terrible judge, he is seen to have been quite unfitted for a role as dogmatic and infallible as the one he tried to fill.

Like many Britons he owed much prompt recognision of his ability as a thinker and much money in his purse as a wi.. to to the tabernacle of the an American constituency in which E. L. Youmans and John Fiske were prominent. He visited us in 1882, had a hearty welcome, told us quite frankly some of our national faults, but salved his acrid comment on unpleasant details by saying that we might reasonably look forward to having a civilization greater than the world has

Some radicals contend the government is run for Wall Street but the proposed tax on stock exchange dealings makes Wall Street think it's run to please the proletariat.

Paris labor leaders plan to have everything but the clocks stop on May 1. They may stop the labor leaders before that date, which may upset their ambitious program.

Until a very recent day my dictionary seemed O. The Massachusetts senate has just voted for 2.75 beer which is good evidence that the old army game of politics is still flourishing in the Bay State.

As the returns from the various States are recorded many of the candidates find it convenient to have press agents if only to invent alibis.

He mentioned prunes and sauer-kraut, but left the good chop suey out; of jazz he didn't strike a note along with other stuff he wrote. Some strikes are authorized and some are outlawed but the effect of all of them upon the general public seems about the same.

Sir Auckland Geddes made his maiden appearance as a public speaker in the United States last night, as befits the scientist that he is, on a scientific occasion. He was guest of honor at the annual dinner of the National Academy of Sciences and received for Prof. Alfred Fowler, president of the Royal Astronomical Society, of England, the Henry Draper gold medal. The award was made for Fowler's researches in celestial and laboratory spectroscopy, which have ied to valuable increases in the knowledge of sun spots, comets and the stars. The new Brittsh Ambassador spoke briefly, emphasising the bonds that unite English-speaking men of science. Sir Auckland makes his real American oratorical debut at Atlantic City today at the Associated Chambers of Commerce convention.
